1. Information about the responsible entity

The entity responsible for our sites, mobile applications and our services is

This Privacy Policy applies on the same basis to each website, mobile application or services referred to above.

2. What is personal information?

Personal information means any information concerning the personal or material circumstances of an identified or identifiable individual.

3. How do we process personal information?

Our apps and websites do not share personal information with third parties. When you write us a mail we'll have your address but we won't use it for anything else than helping you with our apps. We do use anonymous traffic analysis. We only log anonymous technical information mostly in order to adapt fast to the constant hardware and software variations.

4. Specific use of personal information regarding Mobile Applications (“Apps”)

4.1 Location data during the use of Apps

Unlike many other apps on the market, we never send information like your location to a server, everything is processed on your device.
We've designed our weather apps so that the user's precise location remains on the phone and is converted into the nearest weather station ID.
What's more, weather requests linked to a station are not stored, so it's impossible to link a

Global Positioning System “GPS” to inform you about forecasts regarding your current location automatically or upon demand.
Such location-based functions are set by default. You may deactivate or reactivate these functions in the settings of your respective device. We may only collect data regarding your location if you turn on such location services.
The app may also find your location based on your address IP. These requests are fully anonymised. Access logs are disabled on servers so your IP address isn't stored, logged or shared.
The data relating to your location is processed locally on your device in order to obtain a station ID. This station ID corresponds to a weather station closest to your current position.
All requests sent to our servers use end-to-end encryption.
Our weather apps can be used without any form of localisation, you can manually set a location using the search screen. The app will display the forecast for this location each time you will open the app, without trying to localize you.

4.2 Collection of personal information during the use of Apps

We don't collect any personal information from our users.

4.3 Use of Google Analytics or Google Firebase during the use of Apps

For statistical analysis of our Apps we use either Google Analytics or Firebase. We use only basic features of the analytics to understand the number of users, their characteristics, and where they come from. We don't track any Personally Identifiable Information (PII)

4.4 Use of Advertising ID tracking technology

The advertising ID is a unique, user-resettable ID for advertising. The most common advertising identifiers are the AAID (on Android) and the IDFA (on Apple).
You can opt out of these tracking mechanisms at any time by deleting or resetting this identifier from your device's privacy settings.
Our applications may also ask for your consent before using this advertising ID.

4.5 Use of Crashlytics during the use of Apps

These tools use anonymised IP addresses for analytical purposes. Thus, it is impossible to deduce who the particular person using the respective IP address is. Crashlytics provides us with analysis on system failures in real time and facilitates the system’s maintenance. You will find further information regarding crashlytics here: https://firebase.google.com/terms/crashlytics
